GEOGRAPHY is so useful in general to all the branches of learning, and professions in life, that it is justly allowed to be one of the Lights of History*. And, indeed, unless we have the theatre upon which great actions have been performed before our eyes, it is impossible that we should perfectly understand the transactions that, we are told, happened therein. It was for this reason that the ancient writers of History, such as Herodotus, Thucydides, and Diodorus Siculus, are very careful to describe the countries of which they speak, before they enter upon their narratives. And it is very observable, that Cæsar pursues the same method in the writing of his Commentaries.

It would be perhaps both an invidious and unnecessary task to show the advantages of the present undertaking above any thing of the same kind the Public has ever seen before. This however may be said of it, that it has long been wanting, and much desired in the learned world; there having been nothing of this kind published, that I know of, since Dr. Well's; and how far this excels his, even the slightest comparison will evince. In these Maps the Reader will not only see the ancient and present Divisions of Countries at one view, but their Boundaries much more distinctly ascertained and pointed out. The Geography of the Scriptures is taken notice of; and, what has not been seen before, the Repeopling of the Earth by Noah: Upon the whole, nothing has been wanting to render this Atlas of ancient and present Geography far more correct and perfect than any thing of the kind that went before it. All that I shall say further shall only be, to give a description of the different parts both of Land and Water, together with a general division of the countries contained in the Atlas, especially Europe.

Geography is a Description of the Surface of the Earth, as it consists of Land and Water.

Land is divided into a Continent, an Island, a Peninsula, an Isthmus, and a Promontory or Cape.

A Continent is a large tract of land, containing many countries or kingdoms. The Earth is usually divided into two grand Continents, viz. the Old and the New, or the Eastern and the Western: the former of which comprehends Europe, Asia, and Africa; and the latter, North and South America.

An Island is a tract of land surrounded by water; as Great Britain, Ireland, &c.

A Peninsula is a tract of land surrounded by water, except one narrow neck of land, by which it is united to the Continent or main land; as the Morea in Turkey, &c.

An Isthmus is that neck of land which joins a Peninsula to the main land, or Continent.

A Promontory is a high tract of land which projects into the sea; its extremity is called a Cape; as the Cape of Good Hope in Africa, and Cape Comorin in the East Indies.

Rising parts of inland are called Mountains.

Water is divided into Oceans, Seas, Gulfs or Bays, Lakes, Straits, and Rivers.

An Ocean is a large collection of Salt Water, which separates one Continent from another. The three Grand Oceans, are the Atlantic, which divides Europe and Africa from America; the Pacific Ocean, or South Sea, which divides America from Asia; and the Indian Ocean, which divides Africa and the East Indies from New Holland.

A sea is a smaller body of salt water, or a part of the Ocean, which divides one country from another, or washes some particular Shore, from whence it usually borrows its name; as the German Sea, &c.

A Gulf or Bay is a part of the Ocean or Sea, surrounded by land, except where it communicates with the Main; as the Gulf of Mexico, the Bay of Biscay, &c.

A Lake is a collection of water entirely surrounded by land; as the Lake of Geneva, &c.

A Strait is a narrow passage of water, joining one sea to another; as the Straits of Babelmandel, &c.

A River is a stream of fresh water, generally flowing from mountains.

In Maps the North is at top, the South at bottom, the East on the right, and the West on the left.

Maps are laid down according to a certain Scale, which is always taken from the Degrees of Latitude that are marked on the East and West.

The Longitude is always marked on the North and South sides of the Map.

Upon the general Map are marked the Circles correspondent to those on the Terrestrial Globe, viz. the Equator or Equinoctial Line, the two Tropics, and the two Polar Circles, which cross the Map from East to West; the Meridians of Longitude lying from North to South, and the Parallels of Latitude from East to West.

The Dependencies of each country are generally marked with the same colour.
